HCCT: An Initiative Rooted in Rethinking the American Safety Net

The current safety net represents a collection of programs that address discrete aspects of the human condition for members of our society in economic, social, and developmentally vulnerable circumstances.

CURRENT PROGRAMS

The federal government has authorized and administers many siloed programs, each intended to address discrete aspects of human need, resulting in a system that lacks an overarching vision, design, and intention.

Planning a Community Assessment: Resources for Developing a Solid Strategy for Community Change

February 20, 2020

Vice President, Organizational Capacity Building

Learning Objectives

1. Increased knowledge of the role of a Community Assessment within the planning process
2. Increased knowledge of key elements of an effective Community Assessment
3. Awareness and access to Community Assessment resources available through the Community Action Partnership

Community Action Network

*Red, Blue, Purple

the Aisle*

1000+ Agencies | 44 State Associations | 50+ State CSBG Offices | National Partners
More than 15 million served

We work together to promote workable solutions that connect more families to opportunity

It starts with Mission...

Like the roots of a tree, our mission is our foundation. It is our grounding, what ensures that we can withstand whatever challenges might arise.

Every organization has an enduring mission that is the “North Star” that guides its activities. This precedes our planning – it is WHY we engage in planning.

... and it starts with a Process

- A mission cannot be achieved with a solid plan – and a plan requires a process to develop and implement it
- Although the process is ongoing, it starts with an assessment of NEEDS and RESOURCES

Why do we conduct a Community Assessment?

To assess gaps in services & identify resources to address needs

To determine if a particular program is needed

To support organizational strategic planning

CSBG Act requires “causes and conditions of poverty” to be addressed

To develop program priorities

To support the need for funding

To assist with program evaluation

Planning a Community Assessment

- Why are we doing this?
- How do we define “community”?
- Who needs to be involved?
- What capacity do we have to implement this project?
- What methods will we use?
- What timeline/deliverables?

Planning your Community Assessment: Key Questions

Why are we doing this?

- Are we “checking a box” because it’s required or do we have a vision for this project?
- How important is our CA for...
 - Strategic Planning
 - Building partnerships
 - Attracting funding
 - Communicating important issues with stakeholders

Planning your Community Assessment: Key Questions

How do we define “community”?

- “Community” is a very subjective term – we need to be clear what we mean:
 - Geographic area
 - A community defined in an objective way (eg. Tribal membership)
 - A community that self-identifies (eg. Tribal membership and those who are in relationship to members)

Planning your Community Assessment: Key Questions

Who needs to be involved?

- What role will organizational leaders play?
- Staff/ volunteers?
- Community partners?
- Funders?
- Community representatives? A community advisory group?
- Other stakeholders?

Collecting Community Assessment Data

- Data = information
- It is up to YOU decide to what end data are useful
- Quantitative
 - Census* and others
- Qualitative
 - Surveys, focus groups
 - Anecdotes

*The US Census (and other agencies) have several useful surveys and data reports. State/local agencies often compile data as well.

From Planning to Data Collection

368	60	46	83	74
94	45	73	38	99
172	54	91	85	40
	10	30	62	4
3	2.132	2.390	3.850	2.175
45	1.001	1.920	1.748	2.387
33	1.308	3.928	3.176	2.51
697	1.710	1.287	1.272	2
.844	1.725	2.110	1.928
1.903	1.442	3.282	3.28
1.198	2.453	1.272	1
90	92	288
243	430	158
249	277	324
1	175	2

Data collection must be planned:

- What data do we need?
- What issues will we prioritize?
- What methods will we use to collect data?
- What data are most credible/relevant to our stakeholders?

Collecting Community Assessment Data

How do we collect data?

- Quantitative data can be assigned to staff/volunteers to locate, access
- Surveys can be distributed by the organization, through partners/ community members
- Focus groups can be convened in a number of ways – ideally at times and places people are already convening

Possible Data Resources

- Existing assessments/reports
- Public data (census, state and local government data, interest group studies)
- Customer/ organizational data
- Educational institutions – both a resource for data as well as methods and subject matter expertise
- Community stakeholders

Collecting Community Assessment Data

More about qualitative data

- Can be very valuable when quantitative data does not adequately describe the community of interest
- Can be a very “high return” data collection method: use existing staff/volunteer resources to obtain valuable data
- Should be done very thoughtfully: language, literacy, cultural humility, meeting people where they are

Collecting Community Assessment Data

More about quantitative data

Data categories should describe WHO is affected by WHAT issues in the community and WHY that is important

- WHO: Key measures of community groups (important subgroups, as identified by the community – age, gender, etc)
- WHAT: Key measures of community members' access to resources (language and literacy, disability status, location, transportation access, etc)
- WHY: Key measures of equity/opportunity (poverty rates, employment, median income, education level, etc)

Planning your Community Assessment: Key Questions

What is our capacity?

- Do we have people skilled at planning and implementing a large project?
- Do we have people who are skilled with accessing quantitative data?
- Do we have people with the appropriate traits to engage community stakeholders?
- Will this project risk draining resources from other projects?

Planning your Community Assessment: Key Questions

What timeline/final product is realistic?

- Given the scope of the planned assessment and available resources, how quickly can this be done?
- What does “done” even mean?
 - Report documented is completed?
 - Report approved by appropriate body?
 - Report is disseminated to stakeholders?

Analyzing Community Assessment Data: What is your community's story?

Being strategic about planning your assessment, you should be able to tell a very clear story that has the following elements:

- (1) Where is our community now? What do the data say about the current state of our community?
- (1) Why does our community find itself in the condition it is currently in? What are the major factors that are present, that have been present over time? What are possible future concerns or emerging issues?
- (1) What resources are in places to make our community better? How do we write the next chapter of our community's story to be one that is closer to the vision we have?

Communicating the Community

Assessment: Telling your story

- Because we conduct a CA for one or more purposes, it has several potential audiences.
- Each audience may require its own communications strategy
- The CA is a key planning document – but remember, your plan is part of your story!

Communicating the Community Assessment: Telling your story

Audience	Considerations
Governing Body	Effective Executive Summary, highlight key findings that connect to strategic goals of organization
Partners	One-on-one meetings, focus on areas of mutual interest
Community sectors	One-on-one meetings, focus on areas of mutual interest. Consider developing “ infographics ” or one-pagers that can be easily shared with key sectors of interest
Funders	One-on-one meetings, funder conferences. Focus on areas of interest to the funder – demonstrate your organization’s commitment to addressing those issues
Media	Social media , local news interviews. Have several “one-pagers” available for easy media consumption
Community	All of the above – and MORE. Consider language and literacy issues, forums where community is already gathering

Returning to the Process

- Planning and implementing an effective Community Assessment means always thinking about next steps in the planning process
- This year's CA is a foundation for developing a plan
- NEXT year's CA is, in part, an assessment of the impact of our work in the past year
